Three Great Speeches

Abraham Lincoln

Three Great Speeches

Abraham Lincoln

PHILADELPHIA
BENJAMIN F. EMERY, PRINTER
21 SOUTH SEVENTH STREET

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2010 with funding from The Institute of Museum and Library Services through an Indiana State Library LSTA Grant

http://www.archive.org/details/threegreatspeech00linc

The Speech at Independence Hall

I AM filled with deep emotion at finding myself standing in this place, where were collected together the wisdom, the patriotism, the devotion to principle from which sprang the institutions under which we live.

You have kindly suggested to me that in my hands is the task of restoring peace to our distracted country. I can say in return, sir, that all the political sentiments I entertain have been drawn, so far as I have been able to draw them, from the sentiments which originated in and were given to the world from this hall. I have never had a feeling, politically, that did not spring from the sentiments embodied in the Declaration of Independence.

I have often pondered over the dangers which were incurred by the men who assembled here and framed and adopted that Declaration. I have pondered over the toils that were endured by the officers and soldiers of the army who achieved that independence. I have often inquired of myself what great principle or idea it was that kept this Confederacy so long together. It was not the mere matter of separation of the colonies from the motherland, but that sentiment in the Declaration of Independence which gave liberty not alone to the people of this country, but hope to all the world, for all future time. It was that which gave promise that in due time the weights would be lifted from the shoulders of all men, and that all should have an equal chance. This is the sentiment embodied in the Declaration of Independence.

Now, my friends, can this country be saved on that basis? If it can, I will consider myself one of the happiest men in the world if I can help to save it. If it cannot be saved upon that principle, it will be truly awful. But if this country cannot be saved without giving up that principle, I was about to say I would rather be assassinated on this spot than surrender it.

Now, in my view of the present aspect of affairs, there is no need of bloodshed and war. There is no necessity for it. I am not in favor of such a course; and I may say in advance that there will be no bloodshed unless it is forced upon the government. The government will not use force unless force is used against it.

My friends, this is wholly an unprepared speech. I did not expect to be called on to say a word when I came here. I supposed I was merely to do something toward raising a flag. I may, therefore, have said something indiscreet. But I have said nothing but what I am willing to live by, and, if it be the pleasure of Almighty God, to die by.

The Gettysburg Address

FOURSCORE and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate — we cannot consecrate — we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us — that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people for the people shall not perish from the earth.

The Second Inaugural Address

FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN: At this second appearing to take the oath of the Presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first. Then a statement, somewhat in detail of a course to be pursured, seemed fitting and proper. Now, at the expiration of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth on every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention and engrosses the energies of the nation, little that is new could be presented. The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself; and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured.

On the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil war. All dreaded it—all sought to avert it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to saving the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war—seeking to dissolve the Union, and divide effects, by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive; and the other would accept war rather than let it perish. And the war came.

One eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was, somehow, the cause of the war. To strengthen, perpetuate, and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union, even by war; while the government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it.

Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with, or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible, and pray to the same God; and each invokes his aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered—that of neither has been answered fully.

The Almighty has his own purposes. "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through his appointed time, he now wills to remove, and that he gives to both North and South this terrible war, as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to him? Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, "The judgments of the Lord are true, and righteous altogether."

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations.

This is the Third

THIS Booklet is the third of the "American Classics Series." The first was "Bagatelles," by Franklin and the second was "The Speech at Buffalo," by McKinley.

They are published partly for the pleasure they afford in reading over the masterpieces of American literature, but mainly to show the high quality of our printing.

We give careful personal attention to each order, and not one is allowed to leave unless it is up to a high standard—no matter whether it is a simple little card or an elaborate and finely illustrated booklet or catalogue.

Give us a trial order—we will print it in such a way that you will want to send to us for more printing.

BENJAMIN F. EMERY

Printer

21 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia

Keystone 'Phone, Main 46-31-A

Our Specialty

WHILE we are equipped for all kinds of job printing, our specialty is the production of

Fine Booklets

If you are contemplating the issue of a booklet for any purpose we shall be glad to hear from you and give our assistance in estimating size, cost, etc. We can furnish special designs and illustrations, and will help you to produce a booklet first class in every way.

The difference in cost between high-grade booklets and the ordinary kind is not so great as might be supposed. You can lose nothing by getting our prices.

BENJAMIN F. EMERY
Printer
21 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia
Keystone 'Phone, Main 46-31-A

Promptness

Promptness is a good quality at all times, but it seems to be especially necessary to the printing business. There is so much printed matter required for fixed occasions, to say nothing of the man who suddenly discovers he is out of letter heads or other necessary srationery, that the orders are usually accompanied by a "hurry up" request.

It is just such orders that we delight in, and if you send your "rush" orders here you will not be disappointed in the delivery.

Benjamin F. Emery

21 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia

Keystone 'Phone, Main 46-31-A

Look Over Your Stock

PERHAPS you are running short of a very necessary article of stationery. To be without bill heads when you need a bill head is apt to be inconvenient, to say the least.

Letter Heads
Bill Heads
Statements
Envelopes
Receipts
Blanks of any kind

It is easy to avoid the inconvenience. Call up Keystone 'Phone Main 46-31-A and we will call on you at once and give prices on any kind of printed matter.

WHY NOT ORDER IT NOW?

BENJAMIN F. EMERY
Printer
21 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia

71.2009.084.04170

The Finest Printing

If you are in need of Printing and wish an extra nice piece of work, send it to us. We have the facilities for the most particular class of work, and you will be sure of getting a high quality of printing if you place the order in our hands.

Benjamin F. Emery

21 S. Seventh St., Philadelphia